

The Chaotic Neutral Auntie

She brings the wine, leaves before the drama,
and always tells the kids the truth...
gently, but without pretending
life makes sense all the time.

She doesn't lie about love, pretend adulthood is easy,
or say everything happens for a reason.
Sometimes things are just weird.
And sometimes weird is enough.

She's the safe place with a wild past and an open heart.
The one who gives real hugs, buys glitter slime
and sage, and lets you curse a little as long as you use it in a sentence.

She knows which exes to avoid, which dreams are still worth chasing, and how to make you feel seen without making it a whole thing.

She'll show up with snacks and a playlist,
help you dye your hair at midnight,
and text you memes at just the right moment.
She believes in road trips, found family,
and healing that doesn't always look like healing.

She's not a role model. She's a reminder:
You're allowed to grow in any direction.
Even sideways. Even upside down. Even laughing.
